Continuous Process Improvement – Case Study

United States Department of Agriculture (USDA)

PROJECT OVERVIEW:

Since 2010, under our Prime BPA contract, Longevity has been providing Continuous Process Improvement (CPI) services for numerous agencies within the USDA to help implement Secretary Vilsack's directive to improve the quality of processes throughout the Department. Providing business process re-engineering services, LSS mentoring, coaching, training and support for process improvement, we successfully identified areas in which the agency and its staff could implement new, more efficient processes and programs. In addition, we employed our highly skilled team of consultants to assist in project selection and execution for the USDA Mission Areas and Staff Offices throughout the United States and various geographical locations abroad.

LONGEVITY'S ROLE:

Longevity has served as a business transformation partner for numerous agencies within USDA, providing CPI, Lean Six Sigma, and Program and Project Management services. We understand the USDA's environment and are familiar with many of the specific challenges the organization faces. Our CPI methodology helped the USDA realize benefits early in the project. Our demonstrable record of accomplishment in delivering projects on time and on budget has allowed us to be recognized consistently by the USDA through repeat engagements. Longevity was the recipient of the Secretary's Honor Award for Excellence in 2014 "For outstanding efforts and resource savings in streamlining the Annual Resource Management Planning Process for Agricultural Research Services".

BENEFITS REALIZED:

We understand the importance of quality and the value of good business practices, and our CPI consultants are dedicated to making your company run more efficiently while reducing costs. Our "one size fits one" approach to understanding your organization's requirements enables us to consistently provide strong Program, Project, CPI and LSS consulting, training and support services in a variety of complex and demanding environments. These improvements will help to streamline your business, aligning your processes with your business goals and ensuring continued program success.
