Lean Six Sigma Training – Case Study

United States Department of Agriculture (USDA)

PROJECT OVERVIEW:

Since 2010, under our Prime BPA contract, Longevity has been providing business transformation services for numerous agencies within the USDA to meet Secretary Vilsack keen interest in improving the quality of processes throughout the Department. These services include Continuous Process Improvement (CPI) and Lean Six Sigma (LSS) mentoring, coaching, training and support for process improvement, project selection and execution for the USDA Mission Areas and Staff Offices throughout various geographical locations in the United States and abroad.

LONGEVITY’S ROLE:

Longevity was tasked with the design and deployment of a USDA-wide CPI LSS Program, to include the development and delivery of CPI LSS Executive, Sponsor, Black Belk and Green Belt training. Throughout the program, our consultants were able to identify opportunities for process improvement, producing quantifiable results, strategically aligned with the USDA’s mission. Longevity personnel served in strategic, operational and tactical mentorship and coaching roles, and developed project management and reporting systems to identify key milestones and produce dynamic progress reports.

BENEFITS REALIZED:

Through our efforts, the USDA was able to deploy a successful, organization-wide CPI LSS training program, benefitting both the agency and its stakeholders. Longevity’s attention to detail and past experience allowed us to provide them with a meaningful, efficient training solution, making recommendations and designing custom solutions and products throughout the process to ensure customer satisfaction and project success.
